The City of Farmington is requesting $500,000 in state funding to replace the 35-year-old 500KW generator and transfer switch at its Retention Treatment Basin (RTB), located at 32000 W. 9 Mile Rd, Farmington, MI 48336. Constructed in 1990, this 3-million-gallon facility plays a critical role in the City's wastewater management system, receiving and transferring approximately 85% of all wastewater generated in Farmington. On average, it moves over 1 million gallons daily, with volumes reaching up to 3.5 million gallons during major wet weather events via a 7 mile long 18" outfall sanitary line to GLWA

Sanitary system for processing.

This project is essential to maintaining the health, safety, and environmental well-being of Farmington residents. A reliable emergency power supply is critical to ensure uninterrupted operation during power outages, which are increasingly common due to severe weather events. The replacement of the generator and transfer switch ensures operational continuity, prevents potential sewage backups or overflows, and protects the downstream systems, including the Great Lakes Water Authority (GLWA) infrastructure. The benefit to the community is significant. Residents depend on this system to maintain sanitary living conditions, safeguard public health, and prevent environmental contamination. Ensuring system reliability through this equipment upgrade is a responsible and necessary use of taxpayer funds.

This request aligns with Article IV, Section 30 of the Michigan Constitution, as it is directed solely toward a public purpose — maintaining and improving critical municipal infrastructure — and provides no direct benefit to private individuals or entities.
