The Trauma Recovery Center is a one-stop shop for connecting survivors of trauma with mental health services, legal assistance, education, and more free of charge after they leave the hospital.

Recognizing that especially in Detroit, which has historically had some of the worst violent crime in the country, there is a need to better support trauma survivors, a team at Henry Ford Health began to lay the groundwork for the TRC in 2021. In 2023, Michigan lawmakers passed House Bill 4437, allocating $4 million for the establishment of two TRC programs in Michigan and paving the way for today's celebration.

The state funding allowed Henry Ford to hire a multi-disciplinary team of psychologists, psychiatrists and social workers to staff the TRC and serve survivors from across Michigan throughout their recovery. The TRC team is also recruiting trauma survivors to serve as peer mentors.

One in four Michiganders have been the victim of crime in the past 10 years and many report experiencing trauma as a result. Yet, according to a recently released national report, less than one in three crime victims receive help to recover. Issues related to health insurance or lack of access to behavioral health services and providers tend to be the biggest barrier to mental health services.

This appropriation does not violate Article IV, S 30 of the Michigan Constitution because the funding is designated to a not-for-profit hospital system. The purpose and goal of the funding is to provide mental and emotional treatment to crime victims after experiencing a traumatic event in their lives. The funding will be located in the Department of Human and Health Services budget and distributed to the hospital systems according to the boilerplate language.
